le Roter

In about 1292 (above) we have:

et burgagio quod Elias Rotarius tenet;

Robert Cunliffe clerk sued William and Alice de Tabley, Hugh son of Elena, Robert Jay, Elias Roter of Knutsford, Ranulph son of Amelia and Alexander Michelman of Knutsford for disseising him of the common of pasture in Knutsford belonging to his tenement in the same township, i.e. 11 acres 1 rod of woodland, heath, moor and pasture for all his beasts throughout the year. Hugh, Robert and Alexander said that they held 6 acres of the land in question, by demise from William the lord of Knutsford. Elias and Ranulph said that they held 4 other acres there, again by demise from William. Alice said that her only interest in the property was as dower granted to her by her son William, after the death of her husband, William de Tabley. William said that Cunliffe had no property in Knutsford with any right of common. He himself was lord of the manor and had the right to approve any common, so long as sufficient was left to the traditional commoners for their beasts, with free right of entry to the same. The jury said that Tabley had right to 1 acre 1 rod of the premises: Cunliffe had been disseised of the remaining 10 acres, from which the tenants that Tabley had put in should be ejected. Cunliffe was awarded two shillings damages, and each of the defendants was amerced one shilling.

Two years later a quarrel arose between Cunliffe and Tabley in Knutsford. Tabley claimed that Cunliffe had followed him to his house insulting him, and would have beat him in his own home had he not attacked Cunliffe. Cunliffe sued Tabley for 100s.
