Attewell

In 1292 William de Fonte acted as a pledge for the executors of the testament of John de Littlebury. Littlebury had died in or before 1285 (see above, sub Sumner), his heir being his son John, a minor, whose body and part of his lands were in the ward of William son of Simon, and part of the lands in the ward of John son of Alexander Cracket of Middlewich.

Philip Burnell and Urian de Sancto Petro were coparceners of Wych Malbanc barony. Among the duties of the justices in eyre was the checking of the weights and measures used by brewers and merchants in the county. In March 1293 the abbot of Combermere, and James de Stafford, William de Fonte (Attewell), William Joell, William de Fowlshurst and Richard de Fowlshurst bailiffs of the barons of Wych Malbanc failed to appear with their weights and measures, and were accordingly amerced 2 marks (26s 8d) in the county court. At the following sitting, Nicholas de Audley, Ralph de Vernon, Ralph his son, the abbot of Combermere, Urian de Sancto Petro, Philip Burnell and the other coparceners of the barony claimed that they and they alone had the right of checking the weights and measures in the town.
